ARIZONA CARDINALS FAN SURVEY 2026

FAN COMMENTS: COMPLETE APPENDIX

This companion to the survey report prints every answer to the optional question "Is there anything else you want ownership to hear?": all 1,123 comments, so no voice is left out.

COMMENTS BY SEASON-TICKET STATUS

Current season ticket holders	100
Former season ticket holders	314
Never held season tickets	709
All comments	1,123

Out of 3,057 responses in total. Within each group, comments are sorted by how long the respondent has been a fan (longest first), then in the order they were submitted. Each comment has a number and a small tag with the respondent's fan tenure and where they live.

HOW COMMENTS APPEAR

- As written: spelling, grammar and capitalization unchanged; nothing is summarized or shortened. The only changes are the masks below.
- Profanity is masked with asterisks (for example f), never removed. Words respondents already self-censored, such as "f-off", appear as written.
- Slurs are shown as [slur removed]; the rest of the comment appears as written.
- Names of private individuals and any email addresses or phone numbers are masked as [name], [email] or [phone]. Public figures and team personnel named by respondents are left as written.
- Seat locations appear as [section], season-ticket start years as a period ([the late 1980s]), and years as a season-ticket holder or fan are rounded down to the nearest 5 (37 years becomes [35+] years); "fan since" years are left as written. Square brackets mark an editor's generalization of an identifying detail.
- Short answers such as "no" or "n/a" and repeat submissions are included as submitted. No timestamps are shown.

WHAT THIS IS, AND IS NOT

An independent, grassroots online fan survey (Google Form) promoted by fans at cardinalssurvey.com and on social media. It closed Thursday, Oct 22, 2026 at 9 AM (Arizona time) with 3,057 responses. Respondents chose to take part; this is not a scientific poll, and these comments describe the respondents who wrote them, not all Cardinals fans. No identity verification was required.

1. Every experience that I grew up loving about the Cardinals is gone. The personal on social media and radio. Flagstaff. Not every game was filled with other team fans. We have had season tickets since [the late 1980s] and I just have no hope for improvement outside of the fact that I think LaFluer is a good coach. The drafts have just been a disaster over the past 5 years.

2. Would love to see Michael step back and hire a team president to handle day to day for the team. Michael does a lot for the community and would love to see his focus there while someone else focuses on the football ops.

3. I want to know why he continues to do the same things year after year and expect different results? That is the definition of insanity. If he at least hired a team president I would consider renewing my 20+ years held season tickets. But I need to start seeing positive change.

4. Spend the money needed to bring in free agents and compete. Spend the money to make sure the players are happy here. They don't need to pay for food at the practice facility. Have a full time nutritional professional. Make them want to be there and training. The better your team is the higher the organization will be worth. Spend the money upfront to grow the business to something where people want to come to.

6. Mr Bidwill is not a football mind. He is an owner. He needs to hire competent football people, spend the necessary money and otherwise get out of the way. His name and personal character carries a stigma, we need him out of the way in order to recruit true talent to the organization.

11. I am tired of supporting a franchise where losing feels accepted and accountability never seems to reach ownership. Fans invest their time, money, and loyalty into this team, and we deserve a sustained commitment to winning. Michael Bidwill needs to take responsibility for the results and reputation of this organization.

    The concerns extend beyond the scoreboard. The Cardinals reportedly finished 31st in the 2026 NFLPA report cards, with an F for ownership and an F– for the locker room. When your own players rate the organization that poorly, it raises serious questions about investment, priorities, and leadership.

    The $3 million defamation arbitration award to Terry McDonough is particularly troubling. The separate lawsuits involving Brittany Neuheisel, Don Shumpert, and Kendra Hogue also raise serious concerns about the workplace culture. I understand that the Cardinals dispute those allegations and that allegations alone do not establish wrongdoing. Nevertheless, the established defamation finding and repeated workplace complaints have further damaged my confidence in Bidwill's judgment and leadership.

    In my opinion, Michael Bidwill has not demonstrated the leadership this franchise deserves. Changing coaches and players will accomplish little without meaningful accountability at the top. I want qualified football leadership empowered to make decisions, investment that meets the standards of a first-class NFL organization, respectful treatment of employees, and measurable progress toward sustained success.

    If Bidwill cannot deliver that, he should sell the team. Cardinals fans deserve ownership that earns their loyalty. We should not be expected to accept an endless cycle of losing, rebuilding, and promises.

46 Loyal fan since 1988 and man, it's been tough. Overall, the amount of time, money and effort that I've put into a being a fan is hard...there is no return on investment. All the luxury changes in the stadium are great for those who can afford it, most can't. Can we please get back to the game of football and make it fun again? It's exhausting seeing all the opposing fans taking over our stadium week after week. WIN some games and put some red back in all those seats.
20+ YR FAN · PHOENIX METRO

47 The perpetual losing is abysmal and I am embarrassed as the investment of my time, energy, and hard earned money I have spent on this franchise. Soft benching Kyler was joke, starting Brissette is unacceptable, and giving up on Marve after I have bought several of his jerseys for myself and family is exactly what you do to p off a fan base. Same thing with K1, Bryan Murphy, Christian Kirk, cutting D Hop etc as soon as we get cornerstone franchise players and fans buy their merchandise they are traded or cut. I have probably invested over 30k in the last 5 years on the Cardinals but I will no longer contribute to this s show of a greedy sorry a franchise. I'm done! Unless major changes happen i.e. hire a team president and take spend some d money to improve the roster like you expect the fans to do!
20+ YR FAN · PHOENIX METRO

48 We need to get loyalty from a home fan base and stop catering to away fan experience with such items as a away team cocktail special and rivalry grill. I attend multiple away games and enjoy seeing what makes that location and city special or unique to the home team. Hiring a team president that has autonomous decision making is critical to team success.

20+ YR FAN · PHOENIX METRO

53 I would like a better product on the field as our prices have gone up and it doesn't meet the standard of what we're getting in return. I don't think Mr. Bidwill considers the time and money that fans spend for each game (i.e., the hour drive there & back if you live in the East Valley, the merchandise purchased so we can support the themes for each game, the out of state travel expenses (even if it's once a year). I would like for him to show appreciation for the fans that have been there since the ASU times and provide them with signed memorabilia or a fan experience such as an all expense paid trip to an away game, something! Offer discounts to those that have had their seats for over 10 years, 15 years, 20 years, etc.

66 You can get anybody to play for you for $10M - $50M per year. What we need are the players that are willing to come here for $1M per year. The Cardinals are perceived as too low class for that. The Cardinals are cheap at every turn. You nickel and dime the players and you shortchange the fans. You think that displacing loyal fans and taking away perks from the club seat holders is going to build a loyal fan base? You think having empty premium level seating is more important than taking care of your fans that have been with you since the start; well, that's unacceptable. Next to the Cleveland Browns, this is the most unstable franchise in all of sports. You know the longest tenured coach in the whole history of this franchise is Ken Whisenhunt at 6 years. That's pathetic. Every employee I know can't stand you either because you're an ahole to them. I know you don't care about any of this because your family hasn't cared for almost 100 years, ever since you stole the 1925 championship from Pottsville. The more I think about it, I'm not renewing my tickets next year.

80 I've been a season ticket holder for [10+] years, even still holding my tickets despite living in Colorado. My tickets have gone up 75% in 4 years, but almost every game I've been to has been a loss. More visiting fans than cardinals fans, the casitas and sideline seats and 50 yard line club are stupid. We are the oldest team in nfl and seemingly have an urge to continue to lose. I would like to have hope in this team, but I've now started my Sundays expecting to be blown out by 30+ points. We don't sign superstars, we let top draft picks go for cents on the dollar. It's never been harder to be a cardinals fan.
10-20 YR FAN · OUTSIDE ARIZONA

81 We have almost the lowest ticket prices, no issue there, food and beverage at the stadium are crazy. No good place to hang out before the game for food or beer that is not outside. I have a hard time justifying spending season ticket money, its hard to watch loss after loss at home. Fans will b* about every move made on the roster and every play call, its what we do, but we do this out of frustration and love of the team. Make the game day experience better and more affordable. GO CARDS!

83 We're exhausted. Year after year of hoping, Hoping, that This year is Our Year. It never comes. Sure, we had one good run but, in [20+] yrs, one good season isn't enough. Management keeps rolling through first time head coaches, crossing their fingers, Hoping This'll be our guy. All the fans supported Whiz, Kliff, JG ... but you cannot continue to hire first time head coaches like you're playing roulette Hoping to hit pay dirt. I understand it's an entertainment business, but the fans do not feel entertained and haven't in a very long time. I don't care about "great wifi" (that should be a given in 2026), I care about winning football games and not seeing The Nest full of opposing teams' fans. It feels to many fans that Management doesn't really concern itself with that though as long as the seats are filled... because after all, it's a business. The Cardinal support is in the valley but we are all tired of Hoping. We will not be renewing our 7 season tickets that we've had since the inaugural season in [the mid-2000s]. It's sad to me to say that, but we cannot keep supporting the team in that way when the only perk we have is Hope.

113 Message to Ownership

Cardinals Fans United!

We are some of the most loyal fans in all of professional sports. We have stayed through decades of disappointment, broken promises, failed rebuilds, coaching changes, front office mistakes, and losing seasons. Through all of it, we remained loyal. We bought tickets. We bought merchandise. We defended this franchise. We showed up.

We love our players.

We support our players.

We will always support our players.

But loyalty is a two-way street, and Cardinals fans have reached a breaking point.

Winning is not everything in the NFL. It is the ONLY thing that matters. This is the highest level of football on Earth. Every organization is judged by results. Not intentions. Not excuses. Not press conferences. Not promises. Results.

The results speak for themselves.

For far too long, this franchise has accepted standards that would never be tolerated by championship organizations. Year after year, fans are told to be patient, trust the process, and wait for the future. Meanwhile, losing continues, opportunities are wasted, and the gap between the Cardinals and the league's elite organizations grows wider.

Even the players have spoken through their grades regarding facilities, resources, and organizational support. Fans see it. Players see it. The rest of the NFL sees it.

The problem is not one season.

The problem is not one coach.

The problem is not one player.

The problem is a culture that has tolerated failure for far too long.

Being known as the NFL's cheapest owner is not something to be proud of. Cutting costs does not win championships. Investing in people, infrastructure, scouting, player development, and football operations does.

Championship organizations spare no effort in the pursuit of winning.

That is what Cardinals fans expect.

We are tired of watching ownership and management insist things are moving in the right direction while the results say otherwise. We are tired of hearing that change is coming. We want to see change.

Real change.

Accountability must begin at the top.

A successful organization is led by proven football minds with credibility throughout the league. The Cardinals need more experienced NFL executives, advisors, consultants, and decision-makers with championship experience. The organization needs respected football leadership capable of attracting players, identifying talent, building winning cultures, and earning trust across the league.

Too many critical football decisions over the years have failed.

Too many draft classes have failed.

Too many roster-building decisions have failed.

Too many opportunities have been wasted.

At some point, leadership must acknowledge that the current approach is not producing the results this fan base deserves.

The definition of leadership is not refusing to change. The definition of leadership is recognizing when change is necessary.

If ownership is committed to winning at all costs, then prove it. Invest more. Bring in experienced football minds. Modernize the organization. Demand excellence at every level.

If ownership is unwilling or unable to do what is necessary to build a consistent winner, then do what is best for the future of the franchise and explore new ownership.

That may sound harsh.

But this is not anger.

This is exhaustion.

This is decades of frustration.

This is a loyal fan base asking for one thing:

A commitment to winning that matches the commitment Cardinals fans have shown to this team.

We are Cardinals fans.

We are not going anywhere.

But we are done accepting excuses.

Cardinals Fans United! <<< This needs to be the Name you use and always put them first always!

Win.

Or make the changes necessary so that winning finally becomes the standard.

117 Monti Ossenfort should have been fired alongside Jonathan Gannon. After the season, Michael Bidwill claimed he cares about winning. It's clear that winning is not his top priority. Michael needs to hire a team president and take a big step back. Retaining Ossenfort—who has a 17-40 record—and moving forward with Jacoby Brissett as the starter (only three career wins as a Cardinals starter) is pure incompetence.

119 The answer he gave for hiring a Team President was the most Pompous thing I've heard him say. We need a president who can run the operations that is a Football guy. I have been a fan since the day they announced they were coming to Phoenix. My children are fans from the time they were born and our third generation grandchildren are fans my 8 yo grandson loves this team will all his might. Micheal should know after 08 and 15 that this place can be an explosive fan base and really just want a winner and not always hear about the report card and the lawsuits and especially how the treat players families. Recently I thought about hanging it up and go back to the Eagles, my childhood team. I don't want him sale the teams at this point but 100% don't want him to be President. Hire a football person for President, fire Monti start over with LaFluer, new GM and new Team President..... PLEASE

124 Commitment to winning needs to start at the top of the organization and work its way down. Perception is that the organization is not willing to do what it takes to compete for titles. Bad drafting is a killer to progress but significant free agency pickups can make a difference. The new practice complex is a big step in the right direction, but more needs to be done. Feels like the Suns when Sarver was owner. Need an owner who is "all in". Desperately needs to stack wins to turn State Farm back into a home field advantage. It's embarrassing to see the visiting team and their fans take over the building every game. Show serious commitment and the fans will be back.

I was so proud of how we finally got over the hump as an NFL fanbase and experience. I am so beaten down and devastated as a fan to see how far we have fallen from that point. I thought we were past being the perrenial doormat of the league. The volume of loss after loss after loss is what makes the fan experience so aweful. The sheer non competitiveness. The embarrassment of losing and being surrounded by obnoxious opposing fans constantly is just not worth my time, Money, and emotional investment. Why would i subject my family and I to that year after year after year. Sustained winning and respectability is the only thing that will bring me back at this point, and i have virtually zero confidence in ownerships ability to make that happen. 20+ YR FAN · PHOENIX METRO

223 I've been a devoted Arizona Cardinals fan for over 30 years, dating back to Sun Devil Stadium, and have invested thousands of dollars supporting this franchise, including as a former season ticket holder. My loyalty has never been conditional on winning. I've supported this team through decades of disappointment, rebuilding, and heartbreak. What has changed is my belief that this organization genuinely values its fans or prioritizes building a winning football team.

The decision to eliminate the traditional Red Zone seating section, historically home to some of the team's most passionate supporters, and replace it with luxury casitas perfectly illustrates my frustration. Watching those casitas filled with Seahawks fans celebrating with their players in our own end zone was particularly disheartening. It felt like a visual representation of an organization prioritizing premium revenue over fan loyalty, stadium atmosphere, and home-field advantage.

My frustration extends to the repeated cycles of failed rebuilding efforts, questionable personnel decisions, and a lack of sustained accountability under Michael Bidwill's ownership. I don't expect championships every season. I expect an organization that demonstrates a genuine commitment to pursuing them, respects its supporters, and holds itself accountable when its decisions fail.

Arizona sports have been part of my family's identity for generations. My father introduced me to these teams, and I'm now sharing that same tradition with my young son. The Cardinals have provided some of our most cherished memories, including the 2008 NFC Championship. I would love nothing more than to see this franchise finally win a Super Bowl.

But for the first time in three decades, I'm seriously considering directing my Sundays, financial support, and emotional investment toward another NFL franchise. Not because the Cardinals are losing, but because I no longer feel respected or valued as a fan.

I can accept losing. I cannot continue accepting an organizational culture that appears comfortable with mediocrity while taking its most loyal supporters for granted.

I sincerely hope ownership recognizes that the greatest asset this franchise has isn't its premium seating or revenue opportunities. It's the generations of fans who have remained loyal despite having so little success to celebrate. That loyalty should be earned and respected, never assumed.

227 MICHAEL BIDWELL: INVEST IN THIS TEAM OR SELL IT!

Arizona Cardinals fans deserve better. Year after year, we hear the same promises, watch the same struggles, and hope that things will finally change. But at some point, enough is enough.

The Bidwell family has owned this franchise for generations, and fans have long criticized the organization for not investing enough in building a consistent winner. We aren't asking for miracles. We're asking for a serious commitment to winning football.

Michael Bidwell, if you're going to own this team, then spend the money to build a winner! Invest in the roster, bring in the right talent, build a stronger coaching staff, and create an organization that competes for championships instead of leaving fans wondering when things will finally turn around.

And let's be clear: winning one game doesn't erase the bigger problems. Breaking an eight-game losing streak is a relief, but Cardinals fans want consistency, accountability, and a team that can compete with the best in the NFL.

This fan base shows up, buys tickets, buys merchandise, and stays loyal through years of disappointment. We deserve an ownership group that matches that loyalty with a real commitment to winning.

If you're not willing to invest what it takes to build a championship-caliber organization, then sell the team to someone who is!

Arizona isn't short on passionate fans. What we've been waiting for is an organization that gives those fans a reason to believe.

Enough excuses. Enough empty hope. It's time for accountability, investment, and results. Rise up, Red Sea! It's time to demand better! 🏈🔴⚪

The same disappointing product on the field, losing season after losing season, with little reason to believe anything will change.

The fan experience continues to deteriorate while Michael Bidwill seems more focused on maximizing revenue than building a winning organization. Removing red-zone seating to install overpriced casitas is a perfect example. It's another revenue-generating gimmick that caters to luxury experiences rather than the loyal fans who have supported this team through decades of disappointment.

It's no surprise that the Cardinals organization and its facilities have received such poor evaluations. The problems start at the top, and ownership needs to be held accountable.

Michael Bidwill needs to either sell the franchise or hire a qualified team president, give them full authority, and stay out of their way.

Fans aren't asking for gimmicks, luxury seating, or another round of empty promises. We're asking for competent leadership, meaningful investment in the organization, a winning culture, and a legitimate commitment to competing for Super Bowls.

Stop treating this franchise like a revenue stream and start treating it like a football team that owes its fans something worth cheering for.

Sell the team. The Cardinals have not won a Super Bowl in the history. The only constant thing throughout the years is the Bidwill name and their cheap ways. The fans deserve better. Sell the team and go live out the rest of your miserable life as a billionaire.

Why did you displace all the hard-working fans for casitas? Tell me why we have seats on the field and the cheerleaders hiding in the tunnel?

269 It's always been hard to be a Cardinals fan. The last few years, watching the organization displace long time season ticket holders in order to insert high dollar casitas that mostly sit empty has been extremely disappointing. Seeing the stadium filled with opposing fans every single week is unconscionable. I feel bad for our players. Imagine having to play "home games" when in reality, there are 2 or 3 times as many fans rooting for the other team. The organization is a dumpster fire, and will remain so until Bidwill takes accountability.

272 Feels like we cater to the opposing crowd. No investment in the home fan experience. Total joke. Grew up in Kansas City and became a cardinal fan so my kids would grow up with that experience. Moved here in 84 stopped following the chiefs and became a fan of the cards. Sad to see the current state of team.

273 Why hold on to a team you refuse to put resources into? Why prevent an organization you "care so much about" to improve in any way? Why mistreat fans and players for the benefit of nobody? The difference between the Cardinals I used to watch and the Cardinals I watch now is hope. More specifically, an absence of hope. We know nothing will get better until you sell the team. So sell the d team.

I had a lot of fun during the Warner and Palmer years but the rest has been garbage. I'm also not impressed with the way ownership treats the employees and players. 312 Mr. Bidwill, I am a long time fan of the Arizona Cardinals. Despite the multiple coaching changes, the GM change, and attempts at placing a competitive group of players on the field, I have supported the franchise. I have purchased a ticket for thirteen seaons (my sister is the account holder), traveled from the east valley, purchased fan gear and overpriced stale popcorn or other refreshments in the stadium, and traveled to London to support this team. I have endured the nay-sayers who wonder why I would support the Bidwill family-owned franchise, who have long told me that this team will never be competitive and whose only goal is to "line their pockets", the stadium filled with opposing team fans who surround us, and, their snarky comments and gestures. I still support MY Cardinals team, but this year, I did not renew the seat I held and support from home. I will not pour any more money into a franchise that does not support EVERY DAY fans.

I ask that you consider the feelings and best interest of the very loyal FANS that fill the seats of the stadium. We want a competitive team! NOT a team that is considered among the worst in the NFL. Put your money where your mouth is and either step back from operational decisions or sell the team to a person/group who will keep the Cardinal in Arizona.

365 Bidwell needs to get a grip. He needs to see that what hasn't been working over the last 10 years is himself. Hire a president of football operations and take a step back. You did not play football and clearly have zero clue how to run/create/organize a football team. From every year the bad players report cards reviews, to adding casitas and taking away the iconic bleacher seating that made cardinals games so fun to watch back in the day, to refusing the acknowledge the fans and their frustrations with this woeful organization, along with horrible treatment of employees detailed in several lawsuits over the years. This man has done nothing right and needs to sell the team or have a complete epiphany and realize how simple these fixes are. 367 The way Bidwill runs treats the Organization is like it is a Resort instead of a competitive football team in the NFL. After years of being the worst ranked owner and bottom tier organization, we have completely fallen face first into a sewage drain. There is no sense of direction, no person in a front office leadership position that can give clear decisive information about the improvement of the team and the organization. Bidwill does not upgrade or improve the things that would help build a winning team. He instead worries about the enhancements of his stadium that would bring more money for him at games and whenever the stadium is used for things outside of football. He has finally started the new facilities that we have been needing upgraded for a decade however checking off one box on a list of problems that runs pages and pages long is not enough to sway the fans back to unconditionally supporting the team. There is no passion in the owner for actually putting a winning product on the field, there is no urgency for him to find people to actually help him run this team. A team president would go a long way to show fans that there is an effort to improve more than just luxury and cosmetics.

As far as it goes now Bidwill needs to sell the team and move on with his life. He comes off as a spoiled child who took over the team and completely drove it straight into the ground. Like someone had given a child a car and the child crashes it immediately but no one will reprimand the child instead the just smile and nod while they watch the child drive away bouncing back and forth hitting every car in the way like a pinball machine. It is time for change and that change starts at the top. SELL THE TEAM!

434 The Bidwell family has owned the team for almost 100 years with absolutely nothing to show for it. Its time for ACTUAL change. I see comments about the Cardinals being a "legacy franchise" for the NFL, due to being around since the 1800s. Realistically, outside of a couple of brief moments, the Cardinals have been the skid marks on the underpants in the NFL since the 1800s. I will be encouraging my children to follow different teams.

435 Michael, you grew up in a football organization and left to be a lawyer. You are not a football guy. You might know the game through learning it from your father and watching it, but coaches that coach Pee-wee football no more about general talent, football schemes, and knowledge of the game then you do.

The best thing you can do for the fans of a football team that has not been successful since your father was alive, is get an actual team president that understands the game and works with your general manager to put the best product on the field. You can also lower ticket prices and quit price gouging the people that spend their hard earned money to support a team that you clearly don't care about.

The other thing you can do is stop, nickel and diming your players by being cheap. Who cares if you spend $400,000 on food and basic amenities for your player morale? If the players are happy to be there, they will work harder for you. Hell spend $5,000,000 To be a better owner and help the players train better. You couldn't spend $50,000 on a special catching machine to keep a generational wide receiver talent like Marvin Harrison Junior?!??

The final thing you can do which would make every Arizona Cardinals fan happy is sell the team. I have been a Cardinals fan since I was five years old, and I will never understand how we have so much talent and potential on paper and on the field and yet you still make bonehead decisions and won't spend a dime on players that would actually help this organization and this team win and get into the playoffs.

Why would you spend $25 million on Jacoby When he is a terrible quarterback?

Sincerely,

[name] from Peoria ([30+] years as a Cardinals fan)

446 There is a clear history of losing. Nobody can hide from it, but I think taking responsibility but also utilizing resources. We have a lot of smart football legends that can help. Warner has said many times he'd like to help as part time. I know you won't sell and that you want to remain president and it's certainly your right as the owner. But utilize our resources and also I understand the HR and legal items come with the territory but these lawsuits and what they allege are an embarrassment and if any of it is true I believe true changes are required. I want to bring my kids to get games and watch on the tv. But if how the team is ran in a manner that's not conduce to a healthy workplace environment and cheating is allowed...that's not an example I want for my kids or myself.

448 There is a clear path for Mr. Bidwill to gain back fan respect and loyalty. (1) Accept responsibility - if you want to be the owner and team president, then you have to take the fall as both. (2) Be transparent - the fans want to hear from you, and maybe some insight into your decision making will bring respect and clarity. (3) Hire a team president - it is not your fault that the responsibilities keep mounting, but humility and delegation can go a long way. Nobody is questioning your love and loyalty to the team. But sometimes you need to look in the mirror, admit defeat, and learn from your mistakes to be able to grow and move forward. We believe in you, but you have to show us!

449 Identify what is wrong with scouting and development. New DL coach has helped, but certain huge misses with better talent on the board like Adams over Puni need to be evaluated and aolutions found. The pro scouting has been worse, with Players like Bilal Nichols offering no return on investment. Free Agency needs to be a tool in the toolbox, but thus far it seems like Monti has been satisfied with taping a piece of flat steel to a stick and calling it a screwdriver.

He has lost the confidence of the fans, and the organization's struggles trace back to the decisions made at the top. This fan base has been patient for two decades. Millions of loyal supporters should not continue to pay the price for one person's repeated failures. The time for change is now.

I'm a hard-working family man who spends the week after a week providing for my family and one thing I love to do for myself is to watch the Cardinals play on Sunday. Unfortunately, and this started during the cliff Kingsbury era. I really started to feel down about this team's direction because the same problems seem to occur over and over again. And this year, I unfortunately, in the most negative I ever have been and because of the Cardinals, I have stopped watching NFL football altogether. I used to watch all primetime games in addition to every Cardinals game. I just stopped watching. I spend roughly $500-$1000 annually on Arizona Cardinals between gear TV and one game on average a year. I am no longer intending on spending that money. I love the Cardinals. My only hope for me to return as a fan is to finally hear Michael Bidwill do a press conference to take accountability for his own actions. Michael is the reason this team is horrible. 554 As a lifelong fan, I have started getting into the Cardinals right around the time of Kurt Warner and Larry Fitzgerald's run in the early 2000s. As a kid, I thought he were unstoppable with that duo. We had a rough patch and immediately had a vibe and culture shift with the Palmer/Arians/Peterson/Tyrann era. Even selecting Kyler and planning and building for the future was also an exciting time as a franchise having someone as polarizing as him.

Unfortunately ever since Kyler's ACL injury, this team has had no sense of direction and is simply just throwing s on the wall and hoping it sticks. Our last few drafts have been horrendous in terms of finding healthy and reliable talent that can elevate this team. It's a bummer that MHJ didn't pan out the way we all expected him to but I find that to be an issue caused by both the player and also the organization.

When it comes to Bidwell, I am not a person who likes or enjoys going after people's jobs or livelihoods. If I had an NFL team as a family heirloom for over a century, I would feel very hesitant if I saw billboards calling for me to sell my family's work and identity.

With that being said, I do want more communication and accountability out of him when it comes to the franchise as a whole. I'll be honest in saying that I was thrilled about his announcement and plan for the new practice facility. Deep down I do know Bidwell truly cares for the team and is frustrated with the results just like the rest of us but outside of beginning to build the new facility, doesn't seem to take action on the team itself. I rarely ever see him doing a press interview where we can really learn what the plans and ideas surrounding the team are.

Investing into the team is also something I find very important. With the salary space we have we have no reason not to go after marquee free agents. The last ones I remember have been Sweat and Watt which we haven't seen since Keim was GM. Even the players we do have, reading reports about MHJ and his seeker machine dumbfounded me considering it's 100k to invest not only in a #4 pick and franchise cornerstone but the entire rest of the offense.

When I see upgrades for "stadium WiFi" and "casitas" and things that don't often matter to the on-the-field product, it disrupts what could be for the team. At the end of the day I don't need better WiFi at the stadium if my team was producing a fun product to watch. Casita's also feel like they have completely removed a section out of State Farm stadium and if anything minimized the fan experience. As a stadium that is able to manage and provide an amazing Super Bowl experience (something about that stadium produces CLASSIC super bowls) the fan experience itself is fine other than the fact that I feel like I'm the only Cardinals fan in my section. (Although that is a problem that is caused because fans don't want to spend money on a losing product)

Like I've said before I know Bidwell is hesitant to give up his family heirloom but I do believe a team president is needed going forward. We need to start building a core and identity that doesn't feel like "let's hope this works" every week and every season. I do believe in Mike LaFleur as a coach and in his offense but again needs to be on pace with a potential new vision in the team office.

Next we have GOT to change our status quo on the annual report cards. Players don't want to come here because they'll know we won't treat them as good as other teams. Arizona is an amazing place and growing rapidly and we can't sell our beautiful state when our potential free agents aren't even sold on the team itself.

Lastly, we more heads or impact when it comes to our scouting department. Most of our picks are busts and if they are good they never play. As much as I want/wanted to root for players like DRob/Olujari/Will Johnson, drafting them with their health concerns and gambling has always come back to haunt us. I'm a true believer in availability is the best ability and landing high-end prospects shouldn't be as much of a challenge that this organization makes it look.

I am used to rough patches as a Cardinals fan but this time around I feel deeper than I have before but I know this is a hole that we can still climb out of. If Bidwell truly wants to fix this team, having that team president and mediator to him and GM and building the vision is the first step and making the team functional and sound on the annual report cards are the first step. I know we have strong talent such as McBride, Love, Melton, Wilson and can compete with the rest of the league but the identity and team building process needs to be completely revamped.

In a time where a lot of fans are jumping ship, I'm still happy and loyal to be a Cardinals fan knowing we'll have our shine in the spotlight one day, but once the team and the fans are locked into to a team identity the state of Arizona can get around, this team can truly take off.

574 The best example as to why this team needs a new owner and GM is.... My father had season tickets for [5+] years. When he went to go pay his invoice this year, his tickets were in his account and there was no invoice. Someone in the teams ticket office made a mistake and sold his tickets that he has had for [5+] years to another party. Instead of making it right, they offered him tickets a few sections over for double the cost. No apology, no action to make it right, just a sorry and take it or leave it type response. Something like this happens from mismanagement and horrible leadership which starts with the team president who is also the owner conveniently. 20+ YR FAN · PHOENIX METRO

580 It never has been easy being a fan of this team even in the rare good seasons. People often act either surprised or sympathetic when I tell them I'm a fan. I love Arizona, and always will. And the Cardinals have had some players, coaches, and media personalities that were great guys to cheer for and support over the years. Since 2015 though, it's been bleak.

These last few years are really making me think twice about continuing to support this team. The player report cards are damning, the way so many former players and coaches talk about the organization is damning, it's awful seeing the stadium full of other fans, and there is no clear direction or transparency when it comes to this franchise. There is clearly a reason why this coaching vacancy is systematically the last to fill.

It seems like management's vision is to be a second-rate, cheap, discount copycat version of things that succeeded elsewhere. So on top of having a poor present, there is little hope for the future. Things have to change. Please put people in charge who can at least give us hope

I will continue rooting for the Cardinals until the end, but every year it gets more and more exhausting. I think I speak for all Cardinals fans when I say, we just want an organization that can compete. Having to watch the 49ers, Seahawks and Rams in a Superbowl in 8 of the last 15 years while we sit at the bottom of the barrel most of the time is embarrassing. At the very least, a competitive franchise that shows that it wants to win would ease the majority of the fan base. Stop low balling franchise players in contract negotiations, go out and spend money in free agency when a player goes down for the year, go out and make a splashy move every once in a while, do ANYTHING that signals you care. Honestly, if Michael Bidwill called for a presser right now and looked the fan base in the eyes to apologize and openly commit to bringing a Super Bowl to Arizona, the fan base would be through the roof and feel better about Bidwills commitment to the organization. Suns owner Matt Ishbia has publicly promised the fan base a Superbowl. Ishbia makes moves that show a commitment to winning. Why can't we? Go Cardinals, and I pray that something changes.

680 Nothing would make me happier than the Bidwills selling the team. As a lifelong Cardinals fan and being close to some of the athletes on the team, the treatment of players, the lack of investing in getting the team better, or attraction to coming to the Cardinals is not their because of inept management. I see what has happened with the Phoenix Suns organization and see nothing but positive since Matt Ishbia took over the team from Sarver. Why I don't think the Bidwills will ever sell the team is- why would they need fans since we have such a migratory/snow bird population- tickets will be sold at the end of the day which means money to their family. As much as it would be a dream come true to have a new owner, I don't think it is realistic as the Bidwill family makes billions as it is. SELL THE TEAM PLEASE. Michael has consistently said that he cares about winning but his actions don't align with that sentiment. Michael only cares about the bottom line and is completely out of touch with the working class fan. The Casitas and Casa Roja are an abomination to that stadium and a slap to the face of longtime season ticket holders who had to be relocated. Michael has proven time and time again that he is an amateur nepo baby that has no business running a professional football organization. 734 There needs to be an organizational overhaul. 1 playoff appearance in the last 10 years is horrendous. Monti Ossenfort has failed to rebuild this roster. The Browns have rebuilt a better team faster after making one of the worst trades if not the worst trade in NFL history for Desean Watson. Trading away Marvin Harrison Jr. just a few years after taking him 4th overall is a travesty and offensive to the fan base that supported him and bought his jersey expecting him to be a franchise cornerstone. This team will go into this next offseason with the cap space and draft picks to make a run at a renewed roster with some already promising young talent on the team. 742 I've been a Cardinals fan for over 20 years. I don't even live in Arizona, but I've traveled to games, bought jerseys for my kids, and renewed Sunday Ticket every single year. I'm the fan this organization should never lose, and I'm losing faith. I'm also a Clippers and Angels fan so you know I'm loyal to a fault.

The Monti Ossenfort era has been defined by decisions that are hard to defend. Bilal Nichols, Sean Murphy-Bunting, and Justin Jones were paid like difference-makers when very few people outside the building saw them that way. When Mack Wilson is your one clear free agency hit, that's not bad luck, that's a broken evaluation process.

The 2024 draft is worse. Seven picks in the top 90, and three of those players are already gone, cut or traded. That's the kind of class that's supposed to become the core of a contender but alas instead it's being written off before it ever had a chance to matter.

Meanwhile, good players leave and then talk openly about what's wrong with the organization. When that keeps happening, it isn't a coincidence. It is unfortunately the culture that's been curated.

I could live with losing if there were a visible plan. There isn't. It's been more than ten years since this team won a playoff game, and nothing about the current direction says that changes soon.

The fix isn't complicated. Build the lines on both sides of the ball. And start hiring people who are smarter than you, then let them do their jobs.

747 I just mostly want ownership to hear that year-in and year-out, success has been so wholly unsustained that it makes it extremely difficult to be a fan for as long as I have. I would think the lessons taken from this franchise's best years of success would have indicated what this franchise could do to turn it around and find sustained success. No more first time head coaches and "taking a chance" on coordinators. Bring in coaches with proven track records of sustained success for many years (Harbaugh, Tomlin, etc). Develop your drafted players to make an impact early and often. Spend money in order to bring in "field general" free agents that are not in the twilight of their careers and cannot perform. I want all of the time and dedication I've put into this franchise as a fan to mean something. I hate going year after year knowing our lower single digit win seasons won't mean anything. 874 The fans want the Arizona cardinals to be the BEST in every facet. Does ownership? The impression fans get is ownership just wants to be profitable. Does ownership have competitive drive? Being the best doesn't just mean winning games. It means the best gameday experience, the best home field advantage, the best swag, gear, and merchandise, the best training facilities and athlete support, etc. it seems ownership strives to be "acceptable" in these areas, and never excellent. The impression I have after nearly 20 years of cardinals fandom and support is that the successful seasons have happened in spite of all the organizational deficiencies. Almost like we won by accident. Ownership needs to PROVE to the fans they care AT LEAST as much as we do about this team.

890 The team has been a dumpster fire for years and it seems to make no difference to Bidwill. We have one of the worst GMs in the history of the NFL, Ossenfort builds this franchise like they are 1 piece away from a Superbowl. Can someone tell him the Cardinals aren't the same team as the dynasty Tom Brady/Bill Belichick Patriots. All he does is shop in the bargain bin during FA and then misses in the draft. Bidwill and Monti operate this franchise like they win 10-15 games every year. They make little to no changes and expect big results. If you won 3 games last year and basically ran it back this year, why the hell would you expect to do better? Bidwill needs to sell the franchise or step back and hire a team president. No one wants to be apart of the Cardinals organization because Bidwill is cheap, his facilities are garbage and he doesn't care about the players. 979 We have been through coach after coach, QB after QB, rebuild after rebuild, and nothing changes. Since 2019 things have just gotten worse. In fact, it's the worst the franchise has been in the current Super Bowl era. That starts at the top. Michael Bidwill has been the laughing stock of the NFL and all of the sports world for decades. The only owner who compared was Dan Snyder and we saw how that ended up. Mr. Bidwill should preserve what little respect he still has and come to an agreement with his family to sell the team and team shares. I would LOVE to see this team be competent and competitive again, and in a perfect world, win a Championship in my life time, but I truly do not think that it's possible under Mr. Bidwill's ownership. I hope Mr. Bidwill will see these survey answers, and take them to heart. None of this had to be personal if he had just taken this fanbase and his role as owner seriously. But our hard earned money is personal. Our time is personal. The disrespect is personal. Mr. Bidwill has made it personal for every fan by not taking responsibility or accountability, and we have had enough.

981 Bidwell's track record as team president is atrocious. If he did not own the team to give himself the president job, he would not be able to find employment with any other NFL team. It is time to step down and hire a legitimate team president who has a long vision for the future. That new team president then needs to hire a new GM. I like ML as a head coach but Monti hasn't drafted well or acquired great talent through free agency. We need a new GM and Bidwell can't be the one to make that hire.

985 I've been a cardinals fan for [20+] years and the moral compass of Michael Bidwell is consistently pointing in the opposite direction. Common courtesy and the human factor is lacking in the cardinals organization. Bidwell might never sell the team for obvious reasons but he is a toxic man who needs to step away from the team and let a better human run the day to day operations. Bidwell will realize he can still make plenty of money when he has someone with a brain and a heart run the organization better than he can. He can continue to advocate for AZ and the economic impact but as far as running the organization the fewer people have to interact with Michael on a daily basis the better.
10-20 YR FAN · ELSEWHERE IN ARIZONA

986 I know Bidwill has every intention of wanting to win and create a winning culture, but the Cardinals are in a reputation of being cheap and lazy. Unfortunately, because of that, the team is going to have to overspend on certain players/personnel to keep in contention (which helps since we are one of the higher teams in cap, at the moment). Another thing that will greatly help is allowing different ideas to come into the organization and being able to not push ideas away. When Arians came to Arizona, he created an identity around this team and had the freedom to do a lot of things that gave Arizona its best years. I know Bidwill want to have a say in things, but being able to step back isn't all that bad. He can still have control over things, just not everything because there won't be any changes if it's just one person making the decisions. Granted, I'm no business owner, but a great owner and leader is open to taking ideas and putting the company's needs before his own. I know Bidwill can do that and bring the Cardinals back to the glory days.

I want the atmosphere at games to be like the packers divisional playoff game in 2015. I want season ticket holders to actually want to go to games again. That all starts with Bidwill implementing a clear plan to turn this organization around by hiring a team president and most importantly treating the players right. Because we leave that responsibility to the professionals in that field. Mr Bidwill, you are not a Team President, because you aren't the professional in that field. You don't have to sell the team, but you do have to put the right people in the right places, and hold them accountable for the s they make your fans endure. I've stopped watching Cardinals games, and I've stopped buying merchandise.

Especially while failing to do his job well and given more chances than those previously mentioned and ownership shows complete approval of this organizational failure and non commitment to winning by retaining said GM who has failed to build a team of winning or let alone winning a home game in over a full calendar year!

As much as Bidwill may disagree, it's as clear as day that he has no passion for Football or wanting to deliver a winning product, you cannot change my mind, it is clear and obvious. He makes no effort to invest in his players, who invest their time and health into the sport that we all love, I just do not understand how your product is based around the development and quality of your players, but you refuse to develop or improve the quality of your facility and equipment, which in return would improve your players, it should be the cycle of improvement. You need to spend money to make money Mr Bidwill, what about that do you not understand. If your product is winning, then you are winning!! 1082 Treating owning one of the 32 franchises in the world like it's a brick and mortar store trying to stay open cutting costs is the most embarrassing thing I've ever seen. It's a privilege to be in that upper echelon club, and the Arizona Cardinals spend no money on making a single thing more desirable. We are last every single season in almost every metric when players review how they are treated, the facilities, the quality of being a Cardinal. Teams go through rough spots, but this franchise is systemically broken. It's clear that current ownership has no desire to fix it, so we have no choice to demand owners to sell. If everything is always about money, Bidwell should cash out his 401K and sell the team rather than tarnish this city and his name even more.

Today, its much more difficult for me to be a fan openly. People always tell me they feel bad for me, and that I should just switch to a different team. I am sure that's the route a lot of fans go after years of embarrassment, as international fans we have the "ability" to choose any team so when we are constantly ridiculed for being a Cardinals fan its pretty depressing. Decades of losing with no end in sight, why would anyone stay a fan if they were international? Im trying my hardest but I feel a day is coming soon where I just stop watching or caring because I know we are just going to lose and I should save my money and save my self from embarrassment.

I'm optimistic and always buy into the desire to improve but the inactivity and poor decisions have already burnt me out this year. It feels like we want sympathy points because we're in the hardest division and that we just accept these losing seasons without a true desire to win games. We're expected to watch loss after loss with no changes being made. Why are we not spending our cap money? Are we too arrogant or just naive? There are and have been available players to improve our team but we just lowball and then accept the constant rejections. We need a president, it can have a different name if Bidwill wants to keep the title but we need a football guy in that role. Monti unfortunately just can't do it, optimistic about lefleur but again the refusal to make changes is already making me question it. Jacoby can't be our starter for much longer, why did we pay him and why do we continue to start him when there is a promising rookie available?
